Today we get acquainted with planetary values and the basics of birth graphs. Stars offer a boundless understanding, which these days are often served through horoscopes. Our horoscopes can illuminate our daily experiences and help us recognize how the movements of planets - such as Saturn's transition to Capricorn - are causing massive, changing transformations. But let's remember a step backwards: How does this process of interpreting the locations and movements of planets work? What is the definition of a zodiac sign, and how do the signs affect the planet? These questions are fundamental to exploring the basics of reading your birth graphics, which reveals the location of planets in the sky during your birth. Analyzing this table, also called a backline chart, can provide a deep understanding of your personality, motivation, and desires. Let's see how the art of astrology and craft reading birth charts is shaping up, and how you can apply it too. What should astrology do with the stars? People have been watching since dawn time. For thousands of years, our prehistoric ancestors tracked amazing phenomena such as eclipses and short-range comets, as well as frequent cyclical patterns. Distinctive shimmering star clusters were considered constellated, while fixed celestial bodies were identified as planets. Under the thickening of the velvety night sky were discovered moon, Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter and Saturn - known as classic planets. The ancient Babylonians created the zodiac, dividing the sky into twelve sections, each named after the largest constellation, it contained. The zodiac calendar both tracked time and predicted predictions: babylonians observed that the movement of planets, called transits, corresponded to both favorable events and misery on earth. The Romans adopted the zodiac at the dawn of the first century, expanding the roles of stars and planets through mythology. It was at that intersection of remarkable observation and epic folklore that astrology was born. Die Astrologie study to die Interaktionen zwischen Planeten, Sternen und der Personlichkeit.
